The StorySHOP project is progressing at great speed

The project web site is already up and running.

On the web site, the project partners present and share ideas and discuss any relevant topic that might occur.

It is also on the web site that all material developed within the project is available for download.

The web site is available in three languages: English, Italian and Danish and can be found here:

One of the project’s primary results is the project Handbook.

In the Handbook, you will find much useful information about the StorySHOP project but also about digital storytelling applied to the training of healthcare professionals and students. In particular, you will find guidelines on how to produce a digital story as a tool to manage job related stress, particularly concerning healthcare professions, and suggestions about how to implement a digital storytelling workshop with professionals and/or students.

The project Handbook is taking shape and even though it is a work in progress, it is ready to be presented to the trainers for testing.

After the testing, the Handbook will be adjusted accordingly.

The project consortium has also developed a series of guides, in order to help you integrate the training program into your daily classes.
This material has been produced for both trainers and participants and contains guidelines on how to deal with software and websites that could be used to produce a digital story, and guidelines on how to identify and write a story about a turning point, but also templates which could be useful to produce a storyboard.

All potential users and stakeholders interested in learning the digital storytelling based pedagogical methodology developed by the StorySHOP project partnership should be able to understand and implement it, simply by reading the Handbook and the guides.

The Handbook and the pedagogical materials should have been produced in Italian and translated into other languages, but they were actually written in English, in order to be shared with all project partners and get feedback from them. Part of the additional material has already been translated into Italian and Danish, whereas all the remaining ones will be translated after the trainers’ training and experimentation.
